By CLARER BELL.

Author of "Jane Eye," "Shirley," and "Villetta."

12mo. Paper 60 cents, "Muslim, 75 cents.

The wondrous power of Currer Bell's stories consists in their fiery insight into the bunnan heart, their mercless dissection of passion, and their stern analysis of character and motive. The tryle of these productions possesses incredible force—sometimes sinuot grim in its here severily, then relapsing into passes of melling pathos—always direct, natural and effective in its unpretending strength. They exhibit the identity which without the slightest approach to monotony. The characters portrayed by Currer Red all have a strongly marked individuality. Once brought before the imagination, they bainst the memory like a strange draun. The shewy, muscular strength of her writing guarantees their permanent duration, and thus far they have lost nothing of their intensity of interest since the period of their composition.

Seven new names have been added to the list of philosophers—Abelard, Algazzali, Giordana Bruno, Hartley, Darwin, Cabanis and Gall. An Introduction, esting forth the distinguished characteristics of Philosophy and Science, replaces the original Introduction. From The Saturday Review, London.

"Mr. Borrow seems to us to possess, in a very high degree, two girls, which never were common among Englishmen, and which the influences of our modern ways of life make raree every day. Humor and romance are, perhaps, the two words which most nearly describe these quasities. " It is also pleasant thing to find a man who, in these days of railroads and inclosures, can still tell us stories about the old heaths, where shewaymen often robbed and were sometimes gibbeted, and about the "waste tens and windy fields," where gipsies talk about stealing soultry ard poisoning plus in a language which

From The Boston Courier and Providence Journal.

Nothing of the kind that we know of has ever been produced in America, within a long way of the excellence of these wood cuts. The third and fourth in order, to both of which the heroine of the tale is more prominently introduced, show that this Artist is not second to John Leech in the delineation of the most huxurious type of female beauty. The nanchalant expression of face, where Miss Flora is interrupted at the glass, has never been surpassed even in Punch. The last design—in Such the highest insolence of wealth, luxury and fashion, is proght to the hedside of an emacisted dying wretch, writhing in a garret, with the rude ratter, the mice and the cobwebs in the back ground—shows a power of penell, which we are happy to see exists on this side of the Atlantic."

From The N. Y. Evenion Post.

been so universally read and admired—which has done and is swell its attractions."
